CHARACTER APPEARANCE

"A shield is only as strong as what stands behind it. I traded my freedom to keep my daughter safe, and I will cross the world to return to her."

Act I: The Wardens of Skyvein

ALTY: the wardens of Skyvein

In the rugged peaks of the Northern Crests lay Skyvein Hollow, a small mountain chieftdom possessed with a rare, light-turquoise mineral known as Skyvite. Prized by archmages and alchemists, Skyvite was a rare and precious substance, and its use in the natural world was treated with respect. It formed a symbiotic, invisible barrier around the hollow that repelled hostile intent. As chief, Froth from Heartshield enforced strict conservation laws. The villagers mined only what they needed to survive, refusing to construct weapons or sell enchanted relics that might disrupt the balance. Froth's personal life was defined by love and grief. His beloved wife, Rowena, died giving birth to their daughter, Elara. Froth raised Elara alone, while leading his people, wearing his family's namesake—Heartshield—not as a title of war, but as a promise to protect those he cherished.

Act II: The Hostage & The Symbiotic Secret

Act II: The Hostage & The Symbolic Secret

When Fionn was 20, the Iron-Blood Vangard—a brutal band of mountain raiders led by a warlord seeking the Skyante—devised a sinister scheme. Unable to breach the barrier, they ambushed an 11-year-old Elara outside the ward's border. They kidnapped her, taking her to their mountain lair, where her father's life was forfeit. Without hesitation, Fionn handed the leadership of Skyven Hollow to his trusted sister and mother, entrusted Elara to their care, and handed himself over to the enemy. For months, the Vangard tortured Fionn, trying to force him to reveal the trial to break the barrier. But Fionn refused. He knew that revealing the trial would mean the barrier was not a spell to be broken, but a living reflection of the heart. It allowed entry only to those without malice toward the Hollow. Realizing they could not force the mountain to yield, the frustrated warlord band, blindfolded, and sold Fionn to underground slave to kill. The Pias Tribe survived in the blood-soaked gladiator arenas of the south. Forced to kill or be killed, he used his natural strength and defensive instincts to dominate every match, earning the famous title "Redfist" among the arena crowds. Yet, he despised every victory. The violence hardened his exterior, but his resolve to survive and see Elara again kept his inner light alive. Six years after his capture, Fonn seized an opportunity during an arena transport ambush, grabbed what he could from the armory (a warpick and a shield), and escaped. Because his face was famous among wild fight patrons and bounty hunters, Fonn spent the next year fleeing through wilderness and uninhabited lands. The threat of losing his freedom and Elara's respect, kept him on his toes. He was armed with nothing but animal-skin clothing, a crafted shield and a salvaged iron pot, he survived on scavenged roots and wild game, traveling strictly under the cover of night.

Act III: The Pits & The Wilderness

Act IV: The Baker of Oakhaven

✎ at total exhaustion, a emaciated Finn stumbled into the outskirts of Oakhaven, a peaceful valley village. There, he met Minna, a young girl picking wildflowers. Her striking innocence reminded him so fiercely of Elara that Finn broke down, almost collapsing. Minna offered him water and quickly fetched her father, Tobias, the local baker.

✎ Tobias, his wife Jean, and Minna took the stranger in, tending his infected wounds and offering him food and a place to stay. Jean, a kindhearted woman, told them that his hometown had been destroyed by raiders and that he was a sole survivor.

✎ to pay off his debt, Finn began helping Tobias at the bakery. His immense strength made kneading huge batches of dough effortless, and his quiet, protective presence endeared him to the townsfolk. For nearly a year, from lived in a small, rustic cabin on the edge of the valley, a place of remembrance of peace as "From the Quiet Bakery" and becoming known by the name, "Tobias."

By discrete inquiries with traveling merchants, he finally learned the location of Skyvein Hollow—it was thousands of miles away, across dangerous lands, requiring significant funds for passage and equipment.

Act V: Forced into the Shadows

● Jon's peaceful life came to a sudden halt when a party of wealthy foreign travelers visited Oakhaven. Among them were high-stakes gamblers who instantly recognized the former star gladiator. Knowing that slave-catchers and old arena lords would soon come hunting, Frron acted immediately. He packed his savings into a small leather pouch, picked up his trusty iron pot, draped his old animal fur over his shoulders, and left a heartfelt letter of gratitude and farewell to the bakery counter for Tobias, Sean and Mina.

● Once again, Frron vanished into the night—no longer just a fleeing survivor, but an adventurer with a clear goal: raise the funds he needs, navigate the perilous road home, and reunite with his daughter at the gates of Skxvein Hollow.

ALLIES & ORGANIZATIONS

Cold Iron Focus: A quiet, terrifying state of absolute hyper-awareness born from his years in the gladiator pits. His pulse slows, his breathing settles, and he channels pure adrenaline to turn his body into a human shield.

Protective Will: A primal surge of desperate strength fueled by his love for his daughter, Elara, and the memory of his village. He rages not to destroy, but to survive and protect those behind him.

The Clothes on His Back: He wears simple, soft canvas trousers and a cream linen shirt from his time at the bakery, their cuffs stained with faint traces of woodsmoke and old flour dust. Draped over his broad shoulders is his heavy, hand-stitched mantle of dark wolf fur and hardened deer hide—the rugged garb of a wilderness wanderer.

The Scars & Physique: Without armor, his towering 6'2" frame and dense muscle are fully exposed. The faint, silvered arena scars across his collarbone and chest, along with the dark rope branding around his wrists, stand out starkly against his weathered skin.

His Stance: Gone is the relaxed, slightly hunched posture he took while kneading dough at dawn. He stands coiled and weight-balanced, his hazel eyes scanning the tree line with the sharp, twitch-reflex alertness of a seasoned gladiator.
